

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A system and method for load balancing between redundant elements in a system is provided. By using redundant elements overall performance of the system is improved without losing the capability to recover or continue operation upon failure of an element within the system. The solution is of particular use in network systems, networked storage systems as well as location independent file systems.

2007-04-26